

Wills & Estates
Winter Term 2024

Lecture Notes – No. 4

IV. WILLS & WILL-SUBSTITUTES

(a) The Nature of a “Will”

Succession Law Reform Act:

Definitions

1. (1) In this Act,

“will” includes,

- (a) a testament,
- (b) a codicil,

an appointment by will or by writing in the nature of a will in exercise of a power, and any other testamentary disposition.

Power to dispose of property by will

2. A person may by will devise, bequeath or dispose of all property (whether acquired before or after making his or her will) to which at the time of his or her death he or she is entitled either at law or in equity, including,

- (a) estates for another’s life, whether there is or is not a special occupant and whether they are corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments;
- (b) contingent, executory or other future interests in property, whether the testator is or is not ascertained as the person or one of the persons in whom those interests may respectively become vested, and whether he or she is entitled to them under the instrument by which they were respectively created or under a disposition of them by deed or will; and
- (c) rights of entry, whether for conditions broken or otherwise.

- A Will is a formal declaration that is created by the testator during his or her lifetime. The Will represents the intention of the testator to dispose of property upon death.

- A Will is by its nature both revocable and ambulatory - that is the testator or testatrix can change his or her mind and revoke the Will in whole or in part, and, the Will can speak to property that has yet to be acquired by the testator or testatrix or a presently-held asset whose value fluctuates.
- The Will can do much more than just pass on property. It can also represent a devolution of certain other powers or rights that were enjoyed by the deceased during his or her lifetime, such as a power of appointment (that is, the right to give away another's property to a third party).

As a fundamental proposition, only a Will that represents *the deliberate or fixed and final expression of intention of the deceased to dispose of his or her property is valid. It must be in a form that complies with the statute. There is no 'substantial compliance' allowance.

Bennett v Toronto General Trusts Corp.
[1958] SCR 392 (S.C.C.); cb, p. 325

Here the testatrix had a Will naming her husband as the beneficiary of a life tenancy in her Estate and a gift-over of the Estate in set shares to her children. The husband died before the testatrix. She became unhappy with the Will and wrote a letter to her solicitor. In the letter she wrote (in part):

Dear Mr. Dysart

When I was in your offis about a month ago I Promised to let you know how I would like my will to be made out. I have no Ida at all about such matters so Ill leave all that to you, but I do know its Important to have such matters settled before its to late. I will try to outline the way I would like to leave the little I have. the two boys are provided for and do not expect any thing from me. to Dixie her real name is Margaret Dorothea Beautrick Gray Bennett Wife of Charls Paul Bennett the sum of thirty thousand dollars. (30,000) my house if I own a house at the time of my death Also all my furniture and my Car Also my Clothing and fur Coats.--to my daughter Jacqueline Dinnia Gray wife of Victor Fregeau the sum of ten thousand dollars (10,000). and to my Grand daughter, Joyce Gray, I leave five thousand dollars. and I also want to leave to my dearly Beloved Grand daughter Judith Ann Bennett fifteen thousand dollars and my summer home on Coney Island in Kenora Ont and also the furniture in the cottage my watch or any Jewelery and my diamond rings--To the Reverend A.X. MacAulay one thousand dollars to have holey Masses offered to God for the repose of my soul.

Dear Mr. Dysard I will be in Winnipeg in a few days I will call you. Thanks for your trouble and for all your kindness to us.

The testatrix did go to see her lawyer some weeks later but could not decide who to appoint as her executor. Still later they met and there were some additional instructions given about one gift. She died three years later, still not having made a new Will.

Per Fauteux J:

Whether the letter of September 27, 1952, contains per se a deliberate or fixed and final expression of intention must be determined by the phrases immediately preceding and following the intermediate part of the letter where the wishes of Mrs. Gray are expressed; for, read as a whole, the letter has one single subject-matter, indicated as follows by Mrs. Gray: "I Promised to let you know how I would like my will to be made out."

In the opening and closing phrases of the letter, Mrs. Gray conveys to Mr. Dysart sentiments of unreserved trust, reliance and dependence. Born, as admittedly shown by extrinsic evidence, out of an intimate relationship of many years between Mr. Dysart, on the one hand, and Mr. and Mrs. Gray and their children, on the other, these sentiments were those accompanying the mind of Mrs. Gray when, after expressing them, she wrote: "I will try to outline the way I would like to leave the little I have." And having done so, she closed the letter by informing Mr. Dysart that she would be in Winnipeg in a few days and that she would call him.

I am unable to dismiss the view I formed that, read as a whole and according to its ordinary and natural sense, this letter amounts to nothing more than what is a preliminary to a will. While Mrs. Gray indicated to Mr. Dysart the legacies she then contemplated her will to contain, it is clear, in my view, that she did not want that letter to operate as a will. Indeed, by her letter, she is committing to future consultation with Mr. Dysart both the finality of her decisions, if not of her deliberations, and that of the form in which they should eventually be expressed in a regular will, the preparation of which is entrusted to Mr. Dysart himself. If this interpretation properly attends the document, the letter has not per se, and cannot acquire without more, a testamentary nature, and the proposition stated in Godman v. Godman... "that a document which is in terms an instruction for a more formal document may be admitted to probate if it is clear that it contains a record of the deliberate and final expression of the testator's wishes with regard to his property", as well as the proposition stated in Milnes v. Foden [(1890), 15 P.D. 105 at 107.], that "It is not necessary that the testator should intend to perform or be aware that he has performed a testamentary act", are of no application in the present case.

What took place from the date of the letter, September 27, 1952, to the day of the death of Mrs. Gray, April 5, 1956, affords no evidence either that her letter contained a deliberate or fixed and final expression of intention or that it acquired such a testamentary character by subsequent and sufficient manifestation of intention on her part. Indeed the evidence shows that Mrs. Gray failed to pursue what she indicated in her letter she contemplated doing subject to consultation with Mr. Dysart, though there were, during this lengthy period of time, the fullest opportunities and facilities to do so, and that the most reasonable explanation for this failure is the abandonment of her original intention. No decision was ever reached as to the choice of an executor; nor was even the disposal of the residue of the estate ever considered; nor did she, at any time, decide to instruct Mr. Dysart to proceed with the preparation of the will, notwithstanding that both were perfectly aware that the formal will, executed by Mrs. Gary at the same time as that of her husband on January 6, 1949, was still in existence.

Please note that the dicta in this case does not stand for the proposition that a note to a solicitor cannot be a valid Will – the test ultimately is whether the instrument sets out the final and fixed intention of the testator which is intended to have effect at death; e.g. [Re Kavanagh's Will, 1998 CanLII 18096 \(NLCA\).]

“WILL-SUBSTITUTES”

Advantages of a Will-substitute rather than a Will?

- Estate administration taxes arising on death may be avoided;
- The asset can be shielded from creditors as it passes ‘outside the Estate’ – but perhaps not if dependants are inadequately provided for (in which case it may be brought back into the Estate through a judicial order);
- no need for probate and legal fees associated with probate;
- fewer transactions costs;
- minimize opportunities for litigation by disappointed beneficiaries.

Advantages of a Will?

- Income and other taxes arising on death may be minimized through appropriate planning with greater certainty;
- Allows for highly creative plans that suit a person's needs;
- Allows for a comprehensive plan in one document;
- Covers issues beyond transmission of wealth.

One should note that the tax regime has changed with respect to the rigor that the provincial government approaches the collection of Estate Administration Tax.

In the past, there was no real audit in respect of the value of personal property. The Better Tomorrow for Ontario Act (Budget Measures), 2011 amended the legislation to enhance the compliance regime. The Ontario Minister of Revenue is provided with significant audit and verification functions as a result of this change, as well as assessment, objection and appeal mechanisms, similar to those contained in Canada's Income Tax Act. As a result, it is anticipated that there will be much more pressure to verify the value of the assets disclosed in the application for a Certificate. This will likely result in a higher tax payable unless one has engaged in planning to minimize this tax.

The enhanced audit and verification functions will include (among other things) the right to assess and reassess an estate in respect of its tax liability within four years of the tax being payable, a requirement that the Estate Trustee provide all reasonable assistance and answer all questions in respect of an audit being conducted, provide any 'prescribed' information as is requested and a requirement that third parties give the Minister access to their premises and/or permit the Minister to examine their assets and records. The Minister may also assess or reassess an estate in respect of its Estate Administration Tax liability outside the four-year limitation period if any person made a misrepresentation attributable to neglect, carelessness or wilful default, or committed fraud in supplying (or omitting to disclose) information regarding an estate to the Minister.

Estate Administration Tax rate:

$5 for each $1,000, or part thereof, of the first $50,000 of the value of the Estate, and $15 for each $1,000, or part thereof, of the value of the estate exceeding $50,000.

GIFTS

Where large inter vivos gifts are made, three sorts of concerns arise: capacity to make a gift; compliance with common law doctrine to allow the transfer to be regarded as valid as a matter of law; and, whether the donor was “unduly influenced” by the donee or another. The last point is particularly significant where the donee provides care to the donor.

McNamee v. McNamee 2011 ONCA 533 (Ont. C.A.)

Blair and Rouleau JJ.A.:

Elements of a gift

[23] Although the term "gift" is not defined in the Family Law Act, a gift, generally speaking, is a voluntary transfer of property to another without consideration: Black's Law Dictionary, 7th ed. (St. Paul, MN: West Group, 1999), at p. 696; Birce v. Birce (2001), 2001 CanLII 8607 (ON CA), 56 O.R. (3d) 226, [2001] O.J. No. 3910 (C.A.), at para. 17. A transfer of property by contractual agreement involves a mutual exchange of obligations ("consideration"), but a transfer by way of gift involves a gratuitous, unilateral transaction: Mary Jane Mossman and William Flanagan, Property Law: Cases and Commentary, 2nd ed. (Toronto: Emond Montgomery Publications, 2004), at p. 439. As McLachlin J. observed in Peter v. Beblow, 1993 CanLII 126 (SCC), [1993] 1 S.C.R. 980, [1993] S.C.J. No. 36, at p. 991-92 S.C.R., "[t]he central element of a gift [is the] intentional giving to another without expectation of remuneration".

[24] The essential ingredients of a legally valid gift are not in dispute. There must be (1) an intention to make a gift on the part of the donor, without consideration or expectation of remuneration, (2) an acceptance of the gift by the donee and (3) a sufficient act of delivery or transfer of the property to complete the transaction: Cochrane v. Moore (1890), 25 Q.B.D. 57 (C.A.), at pp. 72-73 Q.B.D.; Mossman and Flanagan, supra, at p. 441, Bruce Ziff, Principles of Property Law, 5th ed. (Toronto: Carswell, 2010), at p. 157.

[25] Some authorities have sought to refine or qualify these elements in various ways, but they remain the substance of a [page409] valid gift. Here, the trial judge found two qualifications to be significant. First, he concluded, correctly, that the donor must divest himself or herself of all power and control over the property and transfer such control to the donee. Secondly, he concluded -- incorrectly, in our view -- that the intention of the donor must be inspired by affection, respect, charity or like impulses and not by commercial purposes.

[26] The trial judge based his conclusion that the transfer of shares to the appellant was not a gift on four factors:

(a) the transfer was not a gratuitous transfer but was a transfer for consideration; (b) Mr. McNamee Sr. did not intend to gift the shares; (c) Mr. McNamee Sr. did not divest himself of all power or control over the shares; and (d) the appellant did not accept the gift.

Jansen v. Niels Estate
2017 ONCA 312 (Ont. C.A.)

This appeal concerned an inter vivos conveyance by the testator of her home into joint tenancy with her son, daughter-in-law, and herself. The conveyance was challenged after the testator's death by one child on various bases. The judgment on appeal considered whether the joint tenancy had been severed and whether the conveyance was a proper gift. The former ground was dismissed at trial and appeal for want of evidence. The latter ground was dismissed on the basis that there was a good gift notwithstanding that words of gift were not used. In a per curiam judgment, the Court held on the latter point:

[40] The application judge applied the proper test for a gift, as set out in McNamee and summarized in Foley [Foley v. McIntyre, 2015 ONCA 382 (Ont. C.A.)] at para. 25: “To establish a gift, one must show intention to donate, sufficient delivery of the gift, and acceptance of the gift”.

[41] As the application judge noted, it was not necessary for Theadora to state that she was gifting the property. Her intention to gift the property was evident from her instructions to her solicitor and his assistant and the executed documents, all of which supported this finding. This included:

- her advice to her solicitor that she would take title alone and add Richard to the deed later;
- the codicil to her will, making it clear that the home would not form part of her estate;
- her request that the joint tenancy between herself and Richard be created on his return to Canada;
- the absence of any request to revert the title to tenancy in common; and
- her call to Carol Harding seeking assurance that her home would pass to Richard and Ingrid on her death.

[42] Furthermore, the application judge found that Theadora received legal advice from a lawyer who knew her well; that she understood the consequences of joint tenancy as opposed to tenancy in common; and that she was mentally engaged and cognitive until her death.

[43] The application judge did not wrongly rely on evidence of notes documenting Theadora's visit to her lawyer's office in September 2004 and a phone call made to the office in November, 2004, in determining her intention concerning the gift. The application judge's reasons, and in particular para. 148, do not reflect acceptance of the notes on Theadora's visit as evidence of intention. Rather, the notes were part of the narrative explaining the steps that led to title being in the names of Theadora and Richard and the contents of the codicil. This would also help explain why the appellant took no objection at trial to the admission of the notes.

...

Was Theadora Subject to Undue Influence?

[45] Marjolein submits that the application judge erred by, in effect, requiring her to establish undue influence rather than simply demonstrate that the relationship of the parties gave rise to a potential for undue influence.

[46] There is no merit to this submission.

[47] The application judge applied the law as set out in Foley, in which this court noted, at para. 28, that the presumption of undue influence applies “[w]here the potential for domination inheres in the relationship between the transferor and transferee”, citing Goodman Estate v. Geffen, 1991 CanLII 69 (SCC), [1991] 2 S.C.R. 353, at p. 378. Where the presumption applies, the transferee must establish that a gift was the result of the full, free, and informed thought of the transferor. Evidence that the transferor received qualified and independent advice can be used to rebut the presumption, although it is not required in every case. But corroborating evidence is required in order to rebut the presumption, whether direct or circumstantial in nature.

[48] The application judge applied the presumption that undue influence was exerted, but based on his factual findings concluded, at para. 184, that “the potential for domination and therefore undue influence is completely rebutted.” The application judge emphasized the independence of Theadora. He found that her advanced age was not a trigger for domination. This was not a case in which a totally new estate plan had been entered by a person facing a terminal illness. Theadora was pursuing an intention to gift the property that she developed in 2004 and never wavered from. She was cognitively engaged and unfettered by persuasion.

[49] Although the application judge said that Marjolein provided no evidence of undue influence, when his decision is read as a whole, it is clear that he did not reverse the burden of proof and require Marjolein to prove undue influence. On the contrary, the application judge acknowledged the operability of the presumption but found that it was rebutted. As the application judge put it, at para. 179: “Nothing in the evidence causes me any concern that the direction and eventual registration of the tri joint tenancy deed, was done with anything less than the full acquiescence, acceptance and complete concurrence of Mrs. Niels.”

While no new ground is broken, the judgment provides comfort that intention to gift remains a question of fact that can be inferred from the evidence and that a caregiver is not precluded from receiving a gift from a frail and vulnerable older adult. The possibility of exploitation may itself raise a presumption of undue influence which was rebutted on the evidence.

Morreale v. Romanino
2017 ONCA 359 (Ont. C.A.)

Here the presumption of undue influence respecting a gift from an elderly parent to a child was also at issue. The asset was the proceeds of sale of the deceased’s home which were then used to purchase another home with title being taken by the deceased’s daughter and son-in-law. The deceased was ill with cancer and the daughter and her husband lived with the deceased and provide care services. The deceased did not receive independent legal advice. Gillese J.A. helpfully reviewed the law on point:

1. The Presumption of Undue Influence Did not Arise

[19] At para. 73 of her reasons, the trial judge stated:

I find that in these circumstances, and despite the “special” relationship that existed, it is not possible to find any specific act of coercion or domination that would lead to a presumption of undue influence.

[20] The appellant points to this sentence and submits that it demonstrates an error in law on the part of the trial judge because there is no need for a finding of a “specific act of coercion or domination” in order for the presumption to arise.

[21] I agree. In this regard it is important to distinguish between the presumption of undue influence and actual undue influence. In this case, the trial judge was addressing the question of whether the presumption of undue influence arose, not whether there had been undue influence exerted by the respondent over her parents. There is no need for a finding of a specific act of coercion or dominion in order for the presumption to arise. Whether a person’s free will was overborne by an act of coercion or fraud is a question of actual undue influence: Keljanovic Estate v. Sanseverino (2000), 2000 CanLII 5711 (ON CA), 186 D.L.R. (4th) 481 (Ont. C.A.), at para. 61.

[22] In the case of voluntary gifts, whether the presumption of undue influence arises begins with an examination of the relationship between the parties and the first question to be addressed, in all cases, “is whether the potential for domination inheres in the nature of the relationship itself”: Geffen, at p. 378. This test embraces those relationships that equity has already recognized as giving rise to the presumption, including parent and child: Geffen, at p. 378.

[23] However, while the test embraces relationships that have been recognized as giving rise to the presumption, it is not enough to simply show that such a relationship exists. Even for such relationships, the presumption does not arise unless it has been established that there is the potential for one person to dominate the will of another. The test requires the trial judge to consider the whole of the relationship between the parties to see if there is the potential for domination, rather than looking for a specific act of coercion or domination.

[24] Despite the impugned statement, in light of the trial judge’s findings, I would not interfere with the trial judge’s determination that the presumption did not arise in this case. Far from the respondent having the potential to dominate the will of her parents, the trial judge saw Mr. Ruccia as the dominant party in the financial transactions between the Ruccias and the respondent.

[25] The trial judge was very aware of the family dynamic. She recognized that the respondent lived with her parents all of her life and that, as the Ruccias aged, they became more and more dependent on the respondent and, eventually, her husband as well. However, the trial judge found that Mr. Ruccia told the appellant that she would receive less from their estate than would her sister and that he wanted to ensure that her husband would get no money from his estate. And, importantly, the trial judge found that Mr. Ruccia was a strong-willed individual who made all the financial decisions as between him and his wife and that he was so meticulous in respect of his personal financial affairs that he required the respondent to provide him with receipts for all bank transactions that she performed on his behalf.

[26] Given that Mr. Ruccia's mental capacity was not in issue and in light of the trial judge's findings as to the strength of his will in all things, including those financial, the trial judge made no error in concluding that the presumption of undue influence did not arise in this case.

[Emphasis added.]

Thus while a relationship between an adult child providing care to an elderly parent may in some cases give rise to a presumption of undue influence, there is no categorical necessity to presume undue influence where the evidence is to the contrary. Here the evidence would have rebutted the presumption if it did operate but the refusal to regard it applying categorically operates as a break on frivolous litigation.